

ADT LifeSaver Celebration: California Customer Survives Silent Killer

Instead of a horror show it was a happy ending for a popular Hollywood casting director who recently survived carbon monoxide, thanks to ADT and First Responders.

On July 28, Pixie Monroe had her furniture professionally cleaned. Minutes after the technician left, Pixie started feeling groggy and her beloved dog, Bailey, began acting strangely.

About then, the home's carbon monoxide detector alerted, and ADT's Najee Freeman called to advise Pixie to go outside while he called firefighters.

"At first, I thought the cleaning chemicals triggered the alarm, but when rescuers arrived, they confirmed it was carbon monoxide," said Pixie. "Apparently, the technician's van was parked near the garage and with the engine running, motor exhaust seeped into the house."

During a 'red-carpet' LifeSaver celebration at her southern California home on August 26, Pixie met Najee and thanked him for his lifesaving work.

She also recognized the Ventura County Fire Department which received $10,000 from ADT.

Executive hosting the festivities was Amber Weaver, ADT Vice President of Talent Acquisition.

Besides presenting an award to Najee, Amber also awarded

LifeSavers to three ADT techs who installed and serviced the system in Pixie's house; Andrew Castaneda; Juan Calderon and Eric Waltz.

Also attending were Joe Longfield, Regional Vice President and Georgina Blanch, Area Administrative Manager.
